arces of information to which I have access, that receiving and protecting the Hungarian and Pol sh Refugees the Turkish Government, and especially the Sultan himself, were actuated by the no blest impulses. And if the Porte had been assured of the cordial and actual support of England and France, I have not the slightest doubt that the refu gees would have been released or at once perma nently provided for in a manner agreeable to them llow; nor have I any reason to doubt that the French Minister was personally as favorably inclined to the right side of the case as his English colleague It was probably the temporizing policy of his Government which prevented him from acting as promptly and decidedly as his own inclinations would have led him to do. The other diplomatists did little or nothing officially, though I know of one throughout behaved most nobly toward the refugees; and indeed the Porte well understood that the whole diplomatic corps with at most not above three or four exceptions, were disposed to do ev-erything for them within the limit of their means and instructions.

Until a very recent period the refugees were told that they would be received into the Turkish service, civil or military, as they might prefer, and with fair grades and emoluments. Their expectations have been kept up until Saturday last, when they were informed that none would be en licy in this respect. The Porte is doubtless thoroughly convinced that it cannot rely upon the friendship of England and France; of its elf it i powerless, and it sees no chance of sustaining its self, except by making such terms as it can with Austria and Russia. Fund Effendi the late ambassador to Russia is believed to have returned from St. Petersburg pretty well indoctrinated in the mysteries of Aus trian and Russian politics, and the newly appoint ed President of the Council of State has long been conspicuous for his zealous attachment to Austrian interests. Since the acceptance of the Sultan's offer to Austria, diplomatic relations between the two countries have been formally renewed, and suitical cunning of Austria that we are to ascribe the sudden determination of the Turkish govern ment to make the adoption of Islamiam by the refagees the condition of their employment. It is a most ingenious stroke of policy on the part of Austris, to make the refugees odious in the sight of their own countrymen, and to deprive them of the sympathy and respect of christendom, by compel ling them to turn renegades or starve.

is probable most of them will become Mahommedans. The Poles, on the other hand, are more tenacious of their religion, and comparatively few of them have been seduced by the example of Bem. In the meantime those of the refugees who re fuse to spostatize are suffering the extremest misery. There are hundreds of them at this moment in Pera, without money or bread, and almost without clothing. The Americans here, including our minister, individually do what they can fo them, but in this most expensive of European cities that is but a mite.

Can nothing be done in America to render aid to these unfortunate and most worthy men? Cannot fands be sent here to feed and clothe them unti the means can be found of transporting them to the United States, where they can go to work and earn their own living? There is no time to lose. I am satisfied from an examination of the best

Very soon after the refugees crossed the from tier, the Sultan offered by way of compromise to detain for one year a certain number of selected by Austria within a given time, now said to be fixed at the last of May. The Austrians at first insisted on fifteen, then ten, then five years of confinement in the interior, but have now, as it is said, accepted to the Sultan's offer, though or
